THE BOSTON BOY FIEND.

Confession of Another Horrible Crime by Young Pomeroy.

A STRANGE MORAL OBLIQUITY.

Coolness and Cunning of the Boy Before Confessing.

BOSTON, July 24, 1874.

The atrocities perpetrated by Jesse Pomeroy, the juvenile murderer, of South Boston, continue to multiply. Besides his confession of the brutal butchers of little Katie Curran, the terrible details of which have already been published in the HERALD, he has also owned up to the murder of the Millen boy, a crime of which he was already suspected, and for which he was awaiting trial when the body of the Curran girl was found concealed in his mother's cellar. The same flendish propensity seems to have controlled the youth when he killed the boy as when he butchered the girl, and in one case, as in the other, he seems to have had no other motive for the deed except see how the victim would not. In all of his sinrular and revolting crimes the boy has snown a brewdness and cunning to avoid detection which are no less remarkable than the horrible acts themselves. Indeed, if he had not confessed it is almost certain that he would never have been convicted of either of the brutal murders which ne has owned up to, and the confessions probably would never have been made if his mother and brother had not been suspected of being accessories after the fact in the case of the Curran girl butchery. The fiend seems to have a strong affection for his mother, and the only times he has ever manifested any tender feeling have been when her arrest and rumors of suspicion against her were THE STORY OF THE MILLEN BOY MURDER, as before intimated, is as full of revolting incidents and circumstances as was his confession of the killing of the little girl. He says that on the morning of the 22d of April last he left his home in South Boston and came over to the city proper, and then returned at about nine o'clock and went into the eriodical store kept by his mother, where he remained until half-past eleven. He then told his mother he was going over to the city again, but he went up to Eighth street instead, where he met the Millen boy, and was at once seized with a dehe went up to Eighth street instead, where he met the Millen boy, and was at once seized with a desire to torture him.

He asked the boy if he would like to see the steamer, and the boy answering in the affirmative, both of them started on towards the Dorchester marshes. Arriving there Josse asked the Millen boy to lay down and he imtaediately did so. Then young Fomeroy sprang upon him, and, while noiding his left hand over the boy's mouth to prevent an outery, he cut his throat with the same knile that he used in killing Katie Curran. Pomeroy says the Millen boy struggled learfully, and, thinking that the first wound was not fatal, he stabbed him repeatedly in the bowels and chest, and then left him in a dying condition. After cleaning his knife and his clothes he came immediately over to Boston Common, where he remained some hours before returning home. He gives the same reason for killing the boy that he does for killing the girl, saying that he could not help it, and he wanted to see how he would act. He says he had no intention of killing any one until he met the Millen boy, and when he saw him he could not resist the desire to torture him. All of his story that relates to the Curran girl is the same as heretotore published in the HERALD. Every part of the written conlession of both crimes is prepared with an exactness and minuteness worthy of an experienced reporter. He used for the principal heading, "Jesse H. Pomeroy," and, then, the sur-headings that followed were, "Katle Curran," "The Motive," "His motive for killing the Millen." "The Motive," "His motive, "His motive for killing the killing the Allien boy, he says, was "unintelligible." He was led on by a power he could not resist. In speaking of the Curran girl, he sa, she did not know her. He awoke that morning with a pain in his head and a dizzhess about his eyes. Le could not resist the demand upon him and he did the deed.

The terrible spirit that possessed him seems to leave him with a Leehing the opposite to that or responsibility. He seems of did not know her. He awoke that morning with a pain in his head and a dizziness about his eyes, be could not resist the demand upon him and he did the deed.

The terrible spirit that possessed him seems to leave him with a jeding the opposite to that or responsibility. He speaks of his acts with sand froid and gives the details in a terrible manner. He says that the Curran girl gasped after he cut her throat, and as she led he put his hand over her mouth and cut again. When asked if he sgain went into the celiar he said, "On, yes, often to the water closet, but I never darea look back of it." In both cases he says he had no premention that he was to do such awtul things. He was "swayed into them by a power not to be shaken off."

The young villain's defend was a most plausible one, and bore an appearance of truth and innocence on its very face. To his counsel, Mr. Cotton, of that lessowers of the body of the Curran girl and the subsequent circumstances which orought about a conlession, the young wretch would certainly have been acquitted. He talked confidentially to counsel, and in the most innocent manner told all his affairs from the time of his arising to his returning. Every moment almost he accounted for. But even his zeal and unaccustomed perspicuity seems to have overleaped itself, now the lasts are known. When arist arrested lesse plead innocent of the charges of murdering the Millen boy, and while in the Jail, under Sneriff thats, he prepared a story which, in writing it out, he entitled "Jesse h. Fomeroy's Defence." It was a curious document, and in published entire would cover hearly a page of the eharges of mir flaton, he write it in his cell, and headed it "Jesse it. Pomeroy's defence." It is to have overleaped itself, now the facts are known. When he seems of the people he met on his was from South Boston to the city preper, the appearance of the Common and incidents he experienced on the way. After as had rend it to his counsel no mentioned several facts sworn to by witnesses before the Coroner's ne was inhocent, and his coinsel had hot the sightest hesitation in believing that those in charge of the had at the State Reform School considered him an inhocent boy, or at least not responsible. The best emeris on that supposition were made. For severa days Mr. Cotton scoured Middlesex county to find a man who was supposed to have seen the murderer of the Minen boy. At last he was found. His story was shat on the day in question he was string on a log on the marsh, and saw a boy pass him running. The lad's hands were red with blood, and he noticed it. The Pomeroy boy's counset took him to the Jai, and there he man distinctly stated that the boy in the cell was not the one he saw, for in no particular did he answer the description.

THE COOL REASONING OF THE YOUNG FIEND is well illustrated in his conversations since he has been in Jail. To one he said:—"Now, the papers publish a ridiculous story. They say that after I whipped the boy on Powder Horn Hill I poured sait water on him. How ridiculous! Where could lget sait water up there?" Then, again, be said, "I don't want this to get into the newspapers, for it nurts a young man's reputation to have such things published about him." Being questioned how he came to deny facts and pretend such innocence before counsel, he made carcless remarks, and added that one thing he told was true; he was down on the Common as he had stated. A friend tried to get at his inmost heart and talked with him long about his most heart and talked with him long about his most heart and talked with him long about his most heart and talked with him long about his most heart and talked with him long about his most heart and talked with him long about his most heart and talked with him long about his most heart and talked with him long about his most heart and talked with him long about his most heart and talked with him long about his most heart and talked with him long about his most heart and talked with him long about his most heart and talked with him long about his most heart the l for five or six years, then I will go to sea three years, and by that time I will be a man and strong enough to overcome this desire that seizes me." No instance of his cunning is shown better than in his jumping at the testimony of a witness at the inquest, who described his dress at variance with the story of an officer. It pleased him greatly, and be spoke of it to counsel. There is no possibility of naving extracted a true story from him had his mother and brother not been arrested. He found they would be charged with his work, and when he heard of their arrest he set about to draw diagrams which would illustrate what he had to tell. Now that he has made a clean and open breast of it all he is writing the officers should know it, and enimy awaits the end. After he had told the most blood-trilling story he caimly asked that his mother sem aim a clean spirt and a pair of socks, and said, "What do you think of Jesse H. Pomeroy?"

The Mornel and brother son Charlie are now confined in laid. They are not held on account of any suspicion entertained against them of completive in or knowledge of either of the marriers to which Jesse has coniessed, although there are in some quarters such opinions expressed. They are simply detained to secure their presence as withesses when Jesse's trial comes up. Mrs. Pomeroy is a middin-aged woman and possesses an intellect fair above the average. She feels keenly the position which see Bads hersel in on account of the terrible crimes of her son, and of cruelty and torture. She hopes that he will escape the scaffold, but sensibly believes that he should be confined during the remainder of his life. Her son Charlie, two years older than Jesse, is a boy of unusual intelligence, and in his demeanor and actions there is everything to indicate an attractive but remainer manhood. The father, meanor and actions there is everything to indicate an attractive but premature manhood. The father, an employé in the Quincy Market, and who has lived by himself for several years, is now engaged in attending to the newspaper and periodical business carried on by Mrs. Pomeroy and her boys, but he will surrender it when his wile and Charlie are released from jail.

THE CORONER'S INQUEST.

At an adjourned session of the Coroner's inquest this alternoon the surgeon who made an autopsy of the body presented his report. It is stated in substance that the head was nearly severed from the body; that the clothing of the girl was terribly cut and torn, showing evidence of a fearuil struggle for life, and that in the region of the abdomen and genital organs she was fearfully lacerated. The officers who searched the cellar for the body shortly after the girl was missed were put upon the stand, but their testimony amounted to nothing except the statement that they believed the search of the premises was not a thorough one.

the search of the premises was not a thorough one.

THE PUBLIC FEELING against the officers who searched the cellar in vain is very great, and they will probably follow Captain Dver in his retirement to private life.

The Coroner, who is investigating the case, addressed a note to Sheriff Clark, the custodian of the fend, asking permission for an interview with the prisoner. The Sheriff declined for the reason that the boy cannot be forced to testify against himself, adding also that the accused was opposed to being interviewed by the Coroner or any member of his jury. One of the jurymen suggested that the boy could be produced as a witness under any circumstances, and them he could discriminate whether or not he would testify for or against himself. After some consultation the opinion was unanimous among the jury that such was the excitement prevailing among the people it would be impossible to protect the accused from lynching during his transit to and from the scene of the liquest. With this admission of the Boston Police Department the investigation was adjourned until Monday.

Before the start Billy was the favorite at the pool box, selling at about even against Fanny, the second choice, and the field.

The first heat was contested mainly by Baby Boy and Belle, both doing some breaking, the gelding beating the mare in 2:34.

In the second heat they were all together at the hall, but Belle soon after went away, and won from the Boy by an open length in 2:31.

The third heat was won by Fanny in 2:34, who did most of the trotting, all the others acting badly at times.

The fourth heat was very similar to the third, Fanny never being headed after the word was given. Time, 2:34%.

The fifth Leat was won by Billy, he beating Fanny by a head, after a warm race from the three-quarter pole home. Time, 2:35%.

The sixth heat was won by Flora Belle in 2:36, and the seventh by Honest Billy, aithough both Flora Belle and Fanny beat him out a tride, but they were set back for running.

The second contest was trotted between heats, and was a sweepstakes for $300 between the s. g. Horace Greeley and the g. m. Rosa Bonheur in harness and the b. g. Jester to wagon.

The latter won the first two heats, but the exertion was sufficient to send him back, Greeley winning the last three heats.

THE MYSTERIOUS POISONING CASES. Dangerous Illness of Mrs. Burke and Her

Subsequent Death. Yesterday morning Coroner Woltman received a despatch from Dr. R. Sturges, in attendance upon Mrs. Burke, employed as cook at No. 8 East Thirty second street, stating that she had been taken with a sudden change for the worse, and was lailing gradually. Mrs. Burke is one of the persons alleged to have been poisoned at the time with John Powers and his sister Abme, both of whom nave since died. As Mrs. Burke was not out of the house with the others on the day of the alleged poisoning, the impression naturally prevails that if she had partaken of food impregnated with poison it must have been done at her place of residence. It was there that the deceased parties and Mrs. Burke partook of chowdow.

At three o'clock P. M. Dr. sturges appeared in person before coroner Woltman at his office and stated that half an hour previously Mrs. Burke had died at the residence of her employer. An order was given for the removal of the remains to the Morgue, second street, stating that she had been taken

The Meeting Last Evening-A Mysterious Female Witness Introduced-Testimony of the "Highest Impor-tance" Elicited-Reticence of the Committeemen.

The Investigating Committee of Plymouth church met at half-past eight o'clock last evening at the residence of Augustus Storrs, No. 44 Monroe place, Brooklyn. There was a full attendance of the members. About the hour named a barouche drove up to the mansion in ques tion and a stout, middle-aged lady, attired in a black silk dress and dark turban, and carrying a fan of peculiarly large size, with which she screened her face from the view of the representatives of the press, who lined the sidewalk, alighted. She was escorted by General Tracy, counsel for Mr. Beecher. The couple entered the building. and the members of the press maintained their solemn vigil without doors, waiting for the adjournment of the committee. It was near eleven o'clock before the meeting broke up and the distinguished committeemen descended to the street. The lady and General Tracy also took their departure at that hour. Mr. Sage, who was questioned as to the purport of the evidence adduced during the evening, decl ined to give any information, but he assured the gentlemen of the press that the lady who had given her testimony was not Mrs. Titton. It is believed that the COMMITTEE READ A LECTURE to the gentleman who divulged the cross-examination of Theodore Thiton, which was put lished in these columns yesterday. Mr. Tracy having seen the mysterious lady to her home, was visited, upon his return at his residence in Mon'ague street, near Clinton, and questioned upon the all-absorbing question of the hour. The counsel declined to give the name of the witness either to say who she was not. He would say, however, that the testimony elicited was of the highest importance in the case and would have a strong bearing in the matter when made public. The General said, with regard to THE CROSS-EXAMINATION OF MR. TILTON alluded to above, that it was wonderfully correct, but he positively denied having had anything to do with its publication. He was asked whether the document referred to by Mrs. Tilton as having been signed by her while in ill health, and which seriously compromised ner, was in existence. The General said, "Well, you had better see Mr. Tilton upon that subject. He should know, if any one." The reporter said Mr. Tilton thought "it might be lying round some where." The General wittily rejorted, "Well, he is lying around a good deal himself."

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, July 24, 1874. Another Rumored Change in the Cabinet-Bristow and the Attorney Generalship-Williams Yearning for St. Petersburg. The new Secretary of the Treasury has scarcely had time to become familiar with the appearance of his desk, to say nothing of the details of the department, than it is reported that he is tired of the task and finds it uncongenial to his tastes. It is understood that Attorney General Williams will accept the Russian Mission, more on account of the health of his wife, who has suffered severely from nervous prostration since the nomination of Mr. Williams to the Chief Justiceship, and requires a change of climate to restore ner to health, than for any other consideration. It will be remembered that Mrs. Williams was unfavorably criticised at the time and on account of the nomination, and that she has been in ill health ever since the question was pending. Her physicians are of the opinion that she would be greatly benefited by a foreign journey and a change of life, which a residence at St. Petersburg would give her. General Bristow would gladly accept the office of Attorney General in preference to remaining where he is. A lawyer by profession and practice, he accepted his present position more to please the President than himself, preferring not to be a member of the Cabinet unless it were as Attorney General, and it is understood that he will be gratified in his choice on the retirement of Mr. Williams. The President's preference for Secretary of the Treasury is Hugh McCulloch, to whom, the President says, the country is more indebted than to any one else for instituting a plan for the gradual retirement of the legal tender circulation and an approuch to specie payment. This is the situation as given to your correspondent. Secretary Bristow in conversation yesterday said he would cheerfully exchange his present position for that of Attorney Gene al, and that so far as the report referred to him he had nothing to deny. About his successor, he did not believe Mr. McCulloch would be the man. When Mr. Bristow resigned the office of Solicitor General he accepted a posttion on the Texas Pacific Railroad, the business of which soon proved to be of too speculative a character to suit Mr. Bristow's ideas of business. Pe promptly resigned. It is now asserted by his friends that he does not like the President's directions regarding the placing of the balance of the funded loan, and this was predicted when he took

The President and Secretary of the Treasury in Consultation on the New Loan-The Highest and the Lowest Bid. President Grant was in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, General Bristow, at Long Branch, this morning, examining bids for the new loan. It is probable that they will come to a conclusion this evening, in which case the news will be given to the public by to-norrow. It is said at the Treasury Department that the highest bid yesterday was 101% and the lowest

During the absence of Secretary Bristow the duties of the Secretary of the Treasury devolve upon the First Assistant Secretary. That official to-day announced, in an authoritative manner, that "We don't care a damp for newspapers. We are going to run this department on business principles." This remark was made on account of unfavorable criticism published in the administration organ upon the manner in which the bids for five per cent bonds were opened yesterday.

THE JERSEY BIGAMY TRIAL.

The Jury Out All Night-Verdict of Guilty-Coughlan Escapes-Another Indictment for Perjury.

The jury in the Coughlan bigamy case, as stated in yesterday's Herald, were locked up for the night in the Court House at Jersey City. Judge Redie allowed them to have supper, however, at eleven o'clock. Previous to that they sent a request that the Court would remain, as there was a prospect of agreement. The Judges were tired out at midnight and left the Court House. Yesterday morning at twenty minutes past ten, the consta-bles in charge of the imprisoned twelve an-nounced that the jury had agreed. The Judges took their seats on the oench and directed the constables to bring in the jury. After the usual question was put me foreman an-nounced that the jury jound the prisoner, James Coughan, gulity, with a recommendation to mercy.
